

Leaving the skeptics behind

"There is nothing more pathetic than caution when headlong might save a life, even, possibly, your own." – Mary Oliver, "Moments"

Headlong and headstrong makes all the difference. The mark of true genius is not just passion and desire but undaunted bravery, a fearlessness about the unknown, an active curiosity that spurs someone to look outside the corridor of the familiar to gaze out the window aimlessly for no other reason than to muse.

These pioneers have absolutely no respect for authority and do not mind

D. QUINCY WHITNEY

questioning the "gospel truth" worshipped by "experts" even if it means going in the opposite direction of everyone around them. The rest of the